In 1979, as a single parent I used these charts to try to keep track of my son's progress as he went through school, and to communicate the scope of what he was studying.

For myself (as a student) despite receiving good grades I never felt that I had a good grasp of the over-view of what I was studying.

I believe these type of charts would be helpful, both individually and if students discussed their progress among themselves.

I wonder how different the "Common Core" curriculum is from this content, which was taken from the "Basic Instructional Curriculum" of the Palo Alto unified school district.
